POINCARE WINS FRENCH PRESIDENCY

Premier Elected on Second Ballot, Leading His Closest Competitor by 187 Votes

PARLIAMENT EXECUTES WILL OF THE PEOPLE

Wild Demonstrations of Joy Upon President-elect's Arrival in Paris-His Residence Literally Filled With Flowers-President Fallieries Embraces Him-Challenges to Duels During the Casting of the Ballots-Wild Confusion.

Versailles, France, Jan. 17.—Ray- saying that they may send him what-mond Nicolas Landry Poincare, for ever they consider to be the value the past twelve months premier of the of his work. French cabinet, was elected president of the republic of France today by the national assembly composed of the members of both chambers of parliament in succession to President Ful-lieres, whose seven year term expires February 18.

The wildest confusion, out of which arose two challenges to duels, marked the casting of the ballots.

Chosen on Second Ballot. Premier Poincare was chosen president on the second ballot, his plurality over his nearest competitor, Jules Pams, minister of agriculture, being 187. The deciding vote stood: Raymond Peincare, 483; Jules Pams, 296; Marie Eduoard Vaillant, 69.
Raymond Poincare's first words upon being officially informed of his election as president of France were:
"I shall try to show myself worthy of the confidence of the national assembly. I shall forget without effort the struggles of vesterday and even the struggles of yesterday and even the injuries. Be convinced that I shall seek in everything and at all times to be an impartial administrator." Poincare the Popular Choice. Raymond Poincare's selection for the Raymond Poincare's selection for the presidency, although made by parliament as required by the constitution, is regarded as representing as well the popular will of the nation. The choice took place on the second ballot, the premier receiving 483 votes out of a total of 859 cast, or 53 more than an absolute majority of the assembly. Jules Pams was the next highest candidate in the final vote, the minister

Advertising Benefits Merchant and Buyer

Seek the store which advertises, for the place to buy advantageously, both as to price and quality. It follows just as consistently that a merchant who thus calls his wares to the attention of the public must keep his stock up to date, fresh and attractive in price, as for him to insist that his clerks shall be courteous and accommodating. From those not acquainted with business and advertising, the idea sometimes comes that the buyer has to pay the cost of advertising. It does not hold true any more than the same person might maintain that because a large store employed more clerks, their prices were higher than in the small store with few clerks. Through persistent and judicious advertising, properly a proportioned to his business almost any man can double his trade, by employing the newspaper which thoroughly covers the field. Such a step does not mean that his rent, taxes, bookkeeping cost, insurance and other items would be doubled. Very likely they would not be increased onehalf. Every article has to be-charged something for these general expenses which keep running along whether much business is done or not. Consequently if a merchant doubles his business and increases his fixed charges less than half, he secures his profit, not from increasing the price of his goods but from the increased sales which advertising brings him en lower priced goods.
